Devi honoring her mother Virginia at the Goddess Wand Tree

Aloha LoveTribe,

I was at our family farm in Washington, wildthymefarm, a week + ago. This picture to the left is me "visitng" my mother's stone where her ashes were buried, under the Goddess Wand Tree (wavy branches above), in Robert's Groove, where we also have a labyrinth pictured below. Robert took these pics on our walk to the top meadow and the Grove.

My mother taught love, God was love and she was love.

My ponderings on this Memorial Day honoring, are through this lens. Those interested can read below. For those also/only interested in our Memorial weekend sales (retail honoring) and the Annual City Wide Garage Sale in Point Richmond, here we go...

Memorial weekend ... hmmm

What to remember? The courage to stand and protect against evil and/or perceived evil? Since I'm the type that likes to stand for something instead of against something, I stand for the courage to stand for love, for each other and all relatives' ... species, earth. What does that mean to stand for love? Many hear that as hiding behind proselytizing love without the courage to go to war to protect our values. Here at the Farm in Washington I enjoyed a visit with my friend Joe, who just retired from the army. He always stood for love, even in a difficult environment that creates "sides" and division and the other, the enemy. Though it also fosters the courage to take care of each other, putting your life on the line to do that. He is the type of guy that doesn't like to kill a fly! He did a daily puga, practice of prayer, honoring, gratitude, and offering as his tool to stay on his path of love. He doesn't have PTSD, but does have beautiful energy.

I join a friend of many of ours, Asha, in remembering her son Taliesin, who stood for love when he reached out, in love, to protect a Muslim woman from being harassed by an out of control angry young man on a Portland train. He was shot and killed and his last words were, tell everyone on this train I love them. Two other young man also stepped up to contain the man, one also killed and one wounded. That is dying for love, of all humanity, not countries, not borders. That is the world we are moving to although the old patriarchal world is desperately trying to hold on.

I spoke with Joe this morning and read him this before I send it out. He thanked me for honoring him and told me it is one of those synchronicities, that he was a friend of one of Talaisin's best friend, who he was with (and with his sobs) the day Taliesin was shot. He said he was grateful knowing these young men and grateful for the future he sees in them.

This memorial weekend, lets honor all those who stood for what they believed in. And lets honor and envision love and the world we want to live in.
